Birth: William Brewster was born about 1566, most probably in the Scrooby, Nottinghamshire area.

Life in England: William Brewster was born to William and Mary (Smythe)(Simkinson) Brewster. His father worked for many years as the bailiff and postmaster of Scrooby manor. In 1580, he became a student at the University of Cambridge, but left there to work for Secretary William Davison. After his father's death in 1590, William continued in Scrooby as postmaster until 1603. It was most likely at this time that he joined the Separatist movement. Eventually he, along with many others of the congregation, emigrated to the Netherlands in order to worship openly.

Life in Holland: The Scrooby congregation lived first in Amsterdam for about a year, and in the spring of 1609 left there for Leiden. William Brewster lived near Pieterskerk [St. Peter's church] with his wife and children. He taught English to Leiden University students and worked as a printer. His son, Jonathan, was a ribbonweaver. William was chosen first as assistant to Pastor John Robinson and later as elder. It was in this capacity that he traveled to Plymouth Colony in 1620.

Life in New England: Brewster, his wife, and sons, Love and Wrestling, came to Plymouth aboard the Mayflower. Jonathan arrived in 1621 aboard the Fortune, and his two daughters, Fear and Patience, came to Plymouth in 1623 aboard either the Anne or Little James. William preached in the Plymouth church for many years. He died in 1644.

Family: William married a woman named Mary _____ by 1593. She died in Plymouth in April 1627. William Bradford in writing of William Brewster's life and death wrote, that Brewster had "many children." If so, there may be others besides those listed below as yet unidentified.
